Poncey-Highland Neighborhood Involvement Inspires Master Plan

Jim Burress (2009-06-24)

ATLANTA, GA (WABE) - (More information about an upcoming planning session follows this story.)

Poncey-Highlands is the neighborhood near Freedom Park, roughly south of Ponce de Leon between Inman Park and the Old 4th Ward.

This year it's seen a new, eco-friendly playground. A group of neighbors planted a community garden right beside it. And the neighborhood's new Springdale Park Elementary will soon open.

Much of the work and initiative is coming from those who live there, says city councilman Kwanza Hall. He hopes other Atlanta neighborhoods will be inspired.

"I mean a $250,000 endeavour, they were able to pull off in less than a year. Some groups takes years to do things like that, and never even achieve the goal, but they were able to get together and make it happen."

Because residents are doing so much, Hall's office only has to contribute $13,000 towards the plan that he says normally costs hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Hall says the city should adopt the master plan by Christmas. Jim Burress, WABE News.
